“What have you done to prevent it?”

was a question often posed during the Life Esidimeni investigations. The South African Society of Psychiatrists (SASOP) has embarked on a program “Human Rights for People with Mental Illness” during the second half of 2018, consisting of discussions and presentations in different cities (Johannesburg, Pretoria, Durban and Cape Town), as well as the travelling exhibition of the German Association for Psychiatry, Psychotherapy and Neurology (DGPPN), entitled “Registered, Persecuted, Annihilated - The Sick and the Disabled under National Socialism”. The main theme of these discussions will be to explore the role of professional societies and individual clinicians to uphold and protect the human rights of people living with mental illness. The DGPPN's activities in this area of work and the exhibition, will be an example of a professional society's engagement and will form a backdrop for discussion of the local South African situation and context
